About the Taft

The Baum-Taft House, now known as the Taft Museum of Art, is a National Historic Landmark. Martin Baum, a merchant and Cincinnati's first millionaire, built the house in 1820. Arts patron Nicholas Longworth occupied the house from 1829 until 1863.

Iron magnate David Sinton bought the house in 1871 and lived there with Anna, his only surviving child, and later her husband, Charles Phelps Taft. Taft was the older half-brother of U.S. President William Howard Taft.

In 1900, Anna and Charles Taft began to assemble a renowned collection of fine and decorative arts. In 1927, the Tafts bequeathed their home and collection to the people of Cincinnati. Charles died in 1929, Anna in 1931, and the Taft Museum of Art opened to the public in 1932.
